

Anxious Visions: Surrealist Art

(VE3)Out-of-print. Filled with forebodings of fascism, surrealist artists between the two world wars explored the dynamics between life and death. Rejecting Western ideals of a single truth, universal order or progress, they upset the polarizing we/they mentality that WW I had promoted, writes Stich, a chief curator at the University Art Museum, UC-Berkeley. This amply illustrated exhibition catalogue places a wide range of surrealist works in a historical-intellectual context. Surrealism is seen here as a barometer that responded to many forces, such as the semi-liberated new woman of the 1920s, black literature and music in interwar Paris, the arts of Asia, Oceania and prehistoric cultures, the films of Chaplin, Eisenstein, Bunuel. Eroticized yet formless, the surrealist figure--Max Ernsts mechano-morphs, Man Rays torsos, Dalis plagued personas--embodies a potency for transformation that animates these insightful essays.
