Excerpt: ... C H A P. V. Of malignant. and petechial Fevers: Also a Dissertation about Sanguification or some Arguments to know from the Difference of Food, whet ther Portugueze and Spaniards have more Blood than English Men: With the fourth Expert ment of the terminus ultimus of Blood to be taken away in these Fevers: Together with Hiftories of Cures: As also, Observations, from the Practice of the Portugueze Physicians, that a larger Phlebotomy, in many Cafes will be necessary than in mr present Practice for Cure of the Small-Pos. HAVING shewd sufficient Authorities from eminent Physicians, to prove the Necessity of large Blood-letting in many of thole Fevers which are called malignant, particularly the petechial, where the generality of the present Practices fay, that as little ought to be taken as in any Cafe, except the Plague or a Lipyrial-Fever (and if they take ft j. dr five or six Ounces more from one of the itrongcfl J4en, they think they have dischargd theic I Z PUtt; Duty, because they fave their Credit by walking in a beaten Rode) I sliall now produce the Opinion of a famous Portuguese Physician, Zacutm, as an Objection agaiest my self. He fays: In corf dibits nimirum Hifpanorumy abnndat Janguis crajjhs, succulettus ac compa&us ut ji febre continua corripantur, ni larga fanguinis.mijfio interveniat, omnes morlantur. Contra Germanorum corpora confafta Junt janguine crudo, aquoso, non bene firmo. To this I answer, that for ought I ever could-learn, Zacutus never did practice in Germany, and I believe I have as good Reason to think he never did in England $ so that he only took this Notion from observing the Authors of both Nations mention so small Quantities of Blood taken in the Cure of Fevers, and the most inflammatory acure Distempers, where Dr. ...
