

Fighting Back: The Sequel

When Mary Laforet was fifteen years old, she was severely injured in an automobile accident and entered adulthood as a very disabled individual. By managing her physical challenges to the best of her ability, she spent the next forty years engaged in academic and business pursuits. She says: It was all Gods grace. He gave me the ability to endure my life and question what I was doing and why. I chose to become physically active. Extraordinary pain began to set in when I turned forty-eight years old, and I knew then the muscle system fostered with therapeutic input was doing nothing. It was also by Gods grace that I saw that their suggestions had never worked, but there were certain movements which promoted a pain-free situation. I could strive to promote such action. I then learned how to tap into my own brains role to do these activities of daily living. I strove to tap into its neuroplasticity. As Mary has progressed in the healing process, she has found that her brain has recovered as her body regained its correct bearing. The difference is dramatic. Her biggest lament is that nobody ever knew how to instruct in the correct way to exercise. Now that she has a health coach and a personal trainer certificate, she will use this book to display what she has found to be the most effective. The head injury is truly in a situation of where the blind are leading the blind. Marys goal is to give them hope.
