Excerpt: ... OBSERVATIONS ON THE STATE OF POPULATION IN MANCHESTER, I I I AND OTHER ADJACENT PLACES. B OBSERVATIONS ON THE STATE OF POPULATION I N MANCHESTER, AND OTHER ADJACENT PLACES. FROM an account taken in 1717, the number of inhabitants in Manchester, for I am uncertain whether Salford (a) was included, appears to have been 8000. By (a) Manchester and Salford, though distinguished by different names, like London, Westminster, and the Borough of Southwark, may be considered as one and the same town, being divided only by a small river, over which two bridges are erected. By a survey made in 1757 of Manchester and Salford, the number of inhabitants was found to be 19839. And from 1754 to 1761 inclusive, the number of deaths amounted to 5769. The annual deaths therefore, at the period of the survey, must have been 721, exclusive of dissenters. It is probable, as will appear afterwards, that these would have increased the number to 771. At this time therefore 1 in 25.7 of the inhabitants of Manchester died every year. A New survey of Manchester has been executed this summer (1773) with great care and accuracy, of which the following is a particular account. MANCHESTER. 3402 Houses 5317 Families 10548 Males 11933 Females 7724 Married SALFORD. 866. 1099. 2248. 177S432 MANCHESTER. SALFORD. 432 Widowers 89. 1064 Widows 149. 7782 Under 15 1793 3252. Above 50 640. 342 Male Lodgers 18. 150 Female Do. 13. 44 Empty Houses 26. From hence it appears that the number of tenanted houses in Manchester and Salford amounts to 4268;

the families to 6416; and the inhabitants to 27,246. The proportion of persons to a house therefore is more than 67; and of individuals to a family about 4.1. The females exceed the males by 1654; the widows are more than double the number of widowers; a...
